

Four-
score and seven
years ago our fathers
brought forth on this continent a
new nation, conceived in liberty
and dedicated
to the proposition that
all men are created
equal.
Now we are engaged in
great civil war, testing whether that nation or any nation so conceived and so dedicated, can long endure.
We are met on a great battle field of that war. We have come to dedicate a portion of that field
as a fi-
resting-place of those
here gave their lives that that nation might live. It is altogether fit ting and proper that we should do this. But in a larger sense we,
cannot dedi-
cate ---- we
cannot conse-
crate ---- we
can-
not hallow ----
this ground. The brave
men, living and dead
strug gle d here, have
consecrated it, far above
our poor power to add or detract. The world will little note, nor long re- member, what we say here, but it
can never forget what they
did
here. It is for us the living, rather to be
to the
unfinished work which
they who fought here have thus far so nobly advanced. It is rather for us to be here dedicated to the great task remaining before us--- that from these honored dead we take increased devotion to that cause for which they gave the last full measure of devotion---that we here highly resolve that these dead shall not have died in vain---that this nation, under God, shall have a new birth of freedom---and that government of the people, by the people, and for the people shall not perish from the earth. This address was deliv-
ered at the dedication of Gettysburg Cemetery, Gettysburg, Pennsylvania, November 19, 1863. This speech is admired by
all.
